FOREWORD

The Rwanda Basic Education Board is honoured to present the syllabus for General and Religious studies (S4-S6). It serves both as an official document and as a guide to competence-based teaching and learning of General and Religious studies at the advanced level. The syllabus ensures consistency and coherence in the delivery of quality education across all advanced levels of General Education and the accounting profession option in Rwandan schools.

The Rwandan education philosophy aims to ensure that young people at every level of education achieve their full potential in relevant knowledge, skills, and appropriate attitudes, preparing them to be well integrated into society and to access employment opportunities.

In line with efforts to improve the quality of education, the Government of Rwanda emphasizes the importance of aligning the syllabus, teaching and learning, and assessment approaches to ensure that the system produces the kind of citizens the country needs. Many factors influence what Learners learn, how well they learn, and the competences they acquire. They include the relevance of the syllabus, the quality of teachers' pedagogical approaches, the assessment strategies and the instructional materials available. The ambition to develop a knowledge-based society and the growth of regional and global competition in the job market has necessitated the shift to a competence-based syllabus. With the help of the teachers, whose role is central to the success of the syllabus, learners will gain appropriate skills and be able to apply what they have learned in real-life situations. Hence, they will make a difference not only to their own lives but also to the success of the nation.

I wish to sincerely extend my appreciation to the people who contributed to the development of this document, particularly the Rwanda Basic Education Board (REB) staff who organised the whole process from its inception. Special appreciation goes to the development partners who supported the exercise throughout. Any comment of contribution would be welcome for the improvement of this syllabus.

Dr MBARUSHIMANA Nelson

Director General REB

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to sincerely extend my special appreciation to the people who played a major role in the development and adaptation of the General and Religious Studies syllabus. It would not have been successful without the participation of a range of education stakeholders and the financial support from different donors. For this, I would like to express my deep gratitude.

My thanks firstly go to the Rwanda Basic Education Board leadership, who supervised the curriculum review process, and the Rwanda Basic Education Board staff who were involved in the adaptation of the General and Religious studies syllabus.

Special thanks go to the Rwanda Basic Education Board (REB) staff, subject experts, university lecturers, and teachers for their valuable work in the adaptation of this syllabus. I am also grateful to all our education development partners whose support was instrumental throughout the process.

1.INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background to curriculum review

Under Rwanda's Competence-Based Curriculum (CBC) review, this subject aligns with the broader educational reforms aimed at equipping learners with competences relevant to 21st-century challenges. The subject emphasises civic engagement, informed decision making, ethical values, religious understanding, personal responsibility, accountability and commitment.

General and Religious Studies is taught in all three main learning pathways, namely, Mathematics and Science, Arts and Humanities, and Languages. It is taught in three periods per week, and it is also taught in the accounting profession option

The subject content is competence and values-driven, designed to foster learners' ability to analyse, make informed, ethical decisions, communicate effectively, and promote unity and peace.

Active teaching and learning, Learner-centered methods and other participatory teaching methods are recommended to ensure that learners acquire intended competences. The proposed active teaching and learning techniques include, but not limited to, group work, inquiry, role play, debates, discussion, case studies, testimonies, storytelling, think-pair-share, project-based learning, brainstorming, moral dilemma exercises and problem-solving activities.

The teaching and learning of General and Religious Studies should actively be engaging, practical, and relevant, in helping students to apply competences in real-life situations, to live a meaningful life and to contribute meaningfully to their communities and the nation.

Subject Composition

General and Religious Studies is an integrated subject that combines content from the former General and Communication Skills course, which was taught in Upper Secondary, and Religious Education and Ethics, which was taught in Lower Secondary.

1.2 Rationale for learning General and Religious Studies

Rationale for Learning General and Religious Studies at an advanced level.

General and Religious Studies is a foundational subject designed to promote moral integrity, civic responsibility, and critical understanding of human values, religious beliefs, and social issues. It contributes significantly to Rwanda's broader development goals as articulated in Vision 2020–2050, the Economic Development and Poverty Reduction Strategy II (EDPRS II), and the Education Sector Strategic Plan (ESSP).

Alignment with National Vision and Policies

Rwanda's Vision 2050 aspires to build a knowledge-based, inclusive, and ethical society driven by well-educated and morally upright citizens. General and Religious Studies support this vision by equipping learners with life skills, ethical reasoning, and civic values that nurture responsible, innovative, and patriotic individuals. It empowers learners to think critically, respect diversity, and participate actively in sustainable national development.

Under EDPRS II, education is recognized as a key driver of economic transformation, social inclusion, and good governance. This subject contributes to these priorities by fostering personal discipline, accountability, empathy, and moral integrity, qualities essential for a productive and corruption-free workforce. It also helps learners to understand their roles in promoting social harmony and community development.

In line with the Education Sector Strategic Plan (ESSP), which emphasizes quality learning, equity, competence-based education, and lifelong learning, General and Religious Studies provides learners with essential competencies for life and work. It promotes holistic development—intellectual, moral, spiritual, and social ensuring that learners not only excel academically but also demonstrate positive character and civic engagement.

Contribution to the Education Sector Pillars

General and Religious Studies strengthens the pillars of Rwanda's education sector by:

- Enhancing Quality Education: Developing analytical, reflective, and communication skills needed in real-life decision-making.
- Fostering Ethical Leadership: Instilling national values such as integrity, unity, patriotism, and respect for others.
- Promoting Equity and Inclusion: Encouraging understanding and tolerance of different beliefs and cultures.
- Building Human Capital: Preparing learners for responsible citizenship and active participation in national development.
- Supporting Lifelong Learning: Cultivating adaptability and moral resilience in a rapidly changing world.

General and Religious Studies in advanced level nurtures learners who are morally upright, socially responsible, and intellectually capable of contributing to Rwanda's socio-economic transformation. By aligning with national frameworks such as Vision 2050, EDPRS II, and ESSP, the subject integrates academic excellence with ethical and civic values, which are essential for achieving sustainable peace, unity, and prosperity in Rwanda.

General and Religious studies and learners.

For all the above reasons, General and Religious Studies is multi-disciplinary. It enhances students' maturity of thought and enables them to express ideas and opinions in a reflective and academic manner. General and Religious Studies is designed to complement other studies and will provide useful preparation for higher education, work and life. It encourages students to think across subjects and engage successfully with socioeconomic, financial, political, and gender related issues of daily life using stimulating authentic source material. It develops their thinking skills and capacity to construct arguments as well as the ability to draw valid conclusions.

Through learning General and Religious Studies is an awareness of the wider implications of particular issues will enhance the quality of the students' understanding of global questions and challenges.

1.3 Competence

Competence is defined as the ability to use an appropriate combination of knowledge, skills, attitudes, values and behavior to accomplish a particular task. That is the ability to apply learning with confidence in a range of situations. Basic competencies are addressed as broad subject competences and key competences embodied in the curriculum on a year-on-year basis and in clearly defined units of learning. The generic competencies, basic competences that must be emphasized and reflected in the learning process, are briefly described below and teachers will ensure that learners are exposed to tasks that help their learners acquire the skills.

Generic Competences

Critical and problem-solving skills: The acquisition of such skills will help learners think imaginatively, innovatively and broadly to evaluate and find solutions to problems encountered in their surroundings.

- Creativity and innovation: The acquisition of such skills will help learners to take initiative and use imagination beyond the knowledge provided in the classroom to generate new ideas and construct new concepts.

- Research: This will help learners find answers to questions based on existing information and concepts and use it to explain phenomena from the gathered information.
- Communication: Teachers, irrespective of being language teachers, will ensure the proper use of the language of instruction by learners. Teachers should communicate clearly and confidently and convey ideas effectively both in spoken and written form by applying the appropriate language and relevant vocabulary.
- Cooperation, interpersonal management and life skills: This will help learners cooperate as a team in whatever task is assigned and to practice positive ethical moral values whilst respecting the rights, feelings and views of others. Learners will perform practical activities related to environmental conservation and protection. They will advocate for personal, family and community health, hygiene, and nutrition and respond creatively to a variety of challenges encountered in life.

Lifelong learning: The acquisition of such skills will help learners update their knowledge and skills with minimal external support. Learners will be able to cope with the evolution of knowledge for personal fulfilment in areas that are relevant to their improvement and development.

General and Religious Studies Broad Competences

At the end of the General and Religious Studies course, students should be able to:

- have a broad and better understanding of the world through critical awareness of continuity and change while mindful of shared historical and social experiences in Rwanda and internationally.
- appraise social, cultural, economic, philosophical and scientific phenomena and show an awareness of current local, national and global issues.
- show maturity of thought and apply critical and creative thinking as well as analytical skills to everyday life situations

- Communicate effectively through explanations and show capacity to construct arguments and draw relevant conclusions.
- Demonstrate understanding of religious, moral, and social teachings and apply them to real-life situations with sound judgment and reflection.
- Communicate effectively and respectfully while showing empathy, tolerance, and cooperation with people of diverse beliefs and backgrounds.
- Exhibit integrity, responsibility, and ethical conduct guided by moral and spiritual values in personal, community, and national life.
- Promote peace, unity, and environmental stewardship by engaging in actions that support coexistence, justice, and sustainable development

General and Religious Studies and developing Competences.

The General and Religious studies syllabus is designed in such a way that teaching and learning activities will contribute to the development of generic competencies of critical thinking, research and problem solving, creativity and innovation, communication, and cooperation. It is through regular engagement with learning experiences which develop these competences that learners rise above the level of rote memorization of knowledge and understanding as they become confident in applying their learning. The real life demands of the global economy are for people capable of performing in these practical ways rather than simply in test and examination situations. The Learning activities in all syllabuses contribute to the development of these competences. In doing so, not only do learners develop vital competences, but they also truly engage with what they have learned and so reinforce their knowledge and deepen their understanding. The overall focus of each unit is to develop a subject competence, something subject-specific learners will be able to do as a result of studying the unit. The generic competences developed in the course of the unit all contribute to the overall subject competence. Generic competences should be regarded not as an additional burden on teachers and learners but as a critical element of the curriculum and as a key strategy for improving life chances and subject learning.

2. PEDAGOGICAL APPROACH

The implementation of the General and Religious Studies syllabus will use learner-centered methods of teaching. This approach will promote learning through doing where students are active participants in their own learning.

2.1 The role of the teacher

Learner-centered methods shall be enhanced through the following teacher actions:

- Prepare and give students clear explanations and guidelines on what is supposed to be learnt.
- Actively involve students in the learning process and provide guidance.
- Promote critical thinking, inquiry-based learning, research and problem solving, decision making, creativity and innovation, communication and cooperation.
- Use varied teaching and learning aids which will enable the students to acquire and demonstrate the target skills and competencies.
- Appreciate each individual student and make learning relevant to real life.
- Be patient while encouraging students to prioritise their strategies about how to achieve the learning objectives at a realistic time scale to carry out the learning tasks and make it clearly known to the students.
- Create opportunities for students to interact with each other while remaining part of the process.
- Throughout the teaching and learning process, make deliberate efforts to assess student progression towards attaining and demonstrating the expected competencies, providing timely feedback to students.

- Act as guides, supervisors, assistants, and mentors against the dominant view that they are experts who know everything.
- Students shall be given opportunities to create or construct knowledge and solve problems instead of being fed with facts that may prove to be useless.
- Classrooms should make learners feel friendly and, therefore, stimulating enough to promote cooperation for effective learning.
- All efforts in teaching and learning must be geared towards achieving skills and competencies relevant to real-life experiences.

2.2 The role of the learner

The teacher shall act as a partner, a facilitator and a promoter of learning who organizes classroom interactions. Learning, therefore, shall be rooted in the concept of constructivism, where learners get an opportunity to interact with their peers and the environment at large through well-organized activities such as individual reflections, peer discussions and execution of tasks. Learners use textbooks, the internet and other resource materials to research and understand their findings, which will improve their knowledge, skills, attitude and values. In fieldwork studies, learners apply the knowledge and methods acquired to observe, ask questions, interpret and write down the findings from study. After the field study, learners discuss the findings in groups and write presentations. Learners shall be given opportunities to create or construct knowledge and solve problems instead of being fed up with facts that may prove to be useless.

2.3 Special needs education and inclusive approach

All Rwandans have the right to access education regardless of their different needs. It follows from this that all citizens benefit from the same menu of educational programmes, including those with special educational needs. The critical issue is that we have people/learners who are totally different in their ways of living and learning as opposed to the majority. The difference can either be emotional, physical, sensory and intellectually learning challenged, traditionally known as slow learners.

These learners equally have the right to benefit from the free and compulsory basic education in public schools. Therefore, the schools' role is to integrate them and provide relevant education for them. The teacher therefore is requested to consider each learner's needs during the learning process. Assessment strategies and conditions should also be standardized to the needs of these learners. Detailed guidance for each category of learners with special education needs is provided in the guidance for teachers.

3. ASSESSMENT APPROACH

Assessment is the process of evaluating the teaching and learning processes through collecting and interpreting evidence of individual learner's progress in learning and to make a judgment about a learner's achievements measured against defined standards. Assessment is an integral part of the teaching learning process. In the new competence-based curriculum assessment must also be competence based, whereby a learner is given a complex situation related to his/her everyday life and asked to try to overcome the situation by applying what he/she has learned. Assessment will be organized at the following levels: school-based assessment, district examinations, national assessment (LARS) and national examinations.

3.1 Types of assessment

3.1.1 Formative and continuous assessment (assessment for learning)

Continuous assessment involves formal and informal methods used by schools to check whether learning is taking place. When a teacher is planning his/her lesson, he/she should establish criteria for performance and behavior changes at the beginning of a unit. Then at the end of every unit, the teacher should ensure that all the learners have mastered the stated key unit competences based on the criteria stated, before going to the next unit. The teacher will assess how well each learner master's both the subject and the generic competencies described in the syllabus and from this, the teacher will gain a picture of the all-round progress of the learner. The teacher will use one or a combination of the following: (a) observation (b) pen and paper (c) oral questioning.

3.1.2 Summative assessment (assessment of learning)

When assessment is used to record a judgment of competence or performance of the learner, it serves a summative purpose. Summative assessment gives a picture of a learner's competence or progress at any specific moment. The main purpose of summative assessment is to evaluate whether learning objectives have been achieved and to use the results for the ranking or grading of learners for deciding on progression, for selection to the next level of education, and for certification. This assessment should have an integrative aspect whereby a student must be able to show mastery of all competences.

Assessment can be internal school based or external in the form of national examinations. School-based summative assessments should take place once at the end of each term and once at the end of the year. School summative assessment average scores for each subject will be weighed and included in the final national examinations grade. School based assessment average grade will contribute to a certain percentage as teachers gain more experience and confidence in assessment techniques and in the third year of the implementation of the new curriculum it will contribute 10% of the final grade but will be progressively increased. Districts will be supported to continue their initiative to organize a common test per class for all schools to evaluate the performance and the achievement level of learners in individual schools. External summative assessment will be done at the end of P6, S3 and S6.

3.2 Record keeping

This is gathering facts and evidence from assessment instruments and using them to judge the student's performance by assigning an indicator against the set criteria or standards. Whatever assessment procedures used shall generate data in the form of scores which will be carefully recorded and stored in a portfolio because they will contribute for remedial actions, for alternative instructional strategy, and for feed back to the learner and to the parents to check the learning progress and to advise accordingly, and also to the final assessment of the students.

This portfolio is a folder (or binder or even a digital collection) containing the student's work as well as the student's evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses of the work. Portfolios reflect not only work produced (such as papers and assignments) but are also a record of the activities undertaken over time as part of student learning. It will also serve as a verification tool for each learner that he/she attended the whole learning before he/she undergoes the summative assessment for the subject.

3.3 Item writing in summative assessment

Before developing a question paper, a plan or specification of what is to be tested or examined must be prepared to show the units or topics to be tested, the number of questions in each level of Bloom's taxonomy, and the mark allocation for each question. In a competence-based curriculum, questions from higher levels of Bloom's taxonomy should be given more weight than those from the knowledge and comprehension level.

Before developing a question paper, the writer must ensure that the test or examination questions are tailored towards competence-based assessment by doing the following:

- Identify topic areas to be tested from the subject syllabus.
- Outline subject matter content to be considered as the basis for the test.
- Identify learning outcomes to be measured by the test.

- Prepare a table of specifications.
- Ensure that the verbs used in the formulation of questions do not require memorization or recall answers only but test broad competences as stated in the syllabus.

The wider range of learning in the new curriculum means that it is necessary to think again about how to share learners' progress with parents. A single mark is not sufficient to convey the different expectations of learning which are in the learning objectives. The most helpful reporting is to share what students are doing well and where they need to improve in a given subject.

4. RESOURCES

4.1 Materials needed for implementation

To implement the General and Religious Studies syllabus properly, appropriate and accurate reference materials need to be available and used. These include live or audiovisual testimonies and stories on socio economic and political issues, problematic social cases, pictures, videos, radio and television recorded or live transmissions. Schools must subscribe to different periodicals (journals and newspapers) on socio-economic and political issues. Other important resources include a range of documents such as books, reports and publications (including brochures of financial institutions and documents on gender issues) as well as documentary films on socio economic and political issues, speeches of famous personalities, different types of letters and CVs, charts and graphs showing economic growth, internet, audiovisual interactive online platforms such as the Genocide Archive of Rwanda Interactive Map (<http://www.genocidearchiverwanda.org.rw>) as well as genocide memorial sites, farming stations, agro- processing factories, holy scriptures, etc. Documents of particular interest include the Rwandan constitution and different conventions, protocols, agreements and other legal publications on gender-based violence (GBV) and child abuse, etc.

Finally, schools should have their own libraries with access to internet to facilitate the teaching and learning of GRS. School libraries should be well stocked with relevant reading materials and made easily accessible to students of different abilities and disabilities and include audio-visual materials, Braille and other special equipment for the visually impaired.

The teacher should allow sufficient time for discussion as this will enable him or her to guide students in the practical application of knowledge, skills and attitudes. The school will need to facilitate the teacher by providing extra resources, when necessary, assist by inviting guest speakers to illustrate lessons, and give permission to students for field trips.

4.2 Human resources

To teach the General and Religious Studies syllabus well, teachers need to be qualified for advanced secondary level, to be open-minded, to behave professionally and to act as a role model, as well as being properly trained for delivering the national curriculum.

The teacher should be up to date on current affairs and stories of interest; this can be done through attendance at workshops, reading books, journals, magazines and carrying out online research.

SENIOR FOUR

5 SYLLABUS UNITS

5.1 Presentation of the structure of the General and Religious Studies syllabus units

General and Religious Studies is taught in advanced level for all Learning Pathways in S4, S5, S6 and Accounting profession option respectively.

General and Religious Studies is structured in Topic Areas. Topic Areas are themselves broken down into Sub-Topic Areas while each of these is made up of Units. Units are characterized by the following features:

1. Each Unit shows the number of corresponding lessons in it.
2. Each Unit has a key unit competence that is based on the General and Religious Studies Subject overview, and which is accomplished through all teaching and learning activities undertaken by both the teacher and the learners. At the heart of a competence-based curriculum is the objective of ensuring learners reach a competence level in their learning across the whole curriculum. Hence each unit is written in such a way that it develops a subject competence, referred to as the key unit competence.

3. Each Unit's key competence is broken down into the following three types of learning objective:
 - a) Type I: Learning objectives related to Knowledge and Understanding (these objectives are also known as Lower Order Thinking Skills or LOTS) and are considered to be prerequisites to the following two types of learning objectives that are the ones targeted by the revised curriculum.
 - b) Type II and Type III: Learning objectives relating to Skills as well as Attitudes and Values. These learning objectives are also known as Higher Order Thinking Skills or HOTS and are the ones targeted in the revised curriculum.
4. Each Unit has a detailed content.
5. Each Unit is provided with learning activities that are expected to engage learners in an interactive learner centered participatory approach
6. Finally, each Unit shows its links to other subjects, its assessment criteria and the materials (or resources) that are needed during the teaching-and-learning process.

The General and Religious Studies syllabus has 7 topic areas. In S4, there are 11 sub-topic areas and 12 Units. In S5, there are 11 sub-topic areas and 13 Units and in S6 there are 11 sub-topic areas and 11 Units.

	S4	S5	S6
Topics areas	7	7	7
Sub-topic areas	12	11	11
Units	12	13	11

5.2. General and Religious Studies Syllabus for Senior four

5.2.1 Key competences at the end of Senior four

At the end of S4, the student should be able to:

- Promote the ethical, humanistic, moral and religious values that characterize Rwandan society.
- Communicate with others effectively and persuasively, both orally and in writing.
- Make individual plans which enable a person to live a financially decent and honest life with concerns for sustainable development.
- Use research findings from science and technology to promote health education and healthy behaviors and lifestyles.
- Show awareness of cultural aspects affecting or likely to affect society.
- Analyze and appreciate the role of religion in shaping human values, guiding moral behavior, and promoting harmony, justice, and development in the society
- Compare and appreciate the fundamental beliefs and sacred teachings of major world religions and their influence on human moral and spiritual life.
- Compare the fundamental messages from different religious books for appreciation and sustaining unity in diversity in society.
- Perform responsible, compassionate, and service-oriented acts of charity in line with his/her belief.
